THE TREATY REVISION QUESTION IN JAPAN.

-Viscount Kaeds, Senator, was interviewed a few days ago on the question of Treaty Revision, and according to the Nippon he delivered himself as follows. He said he helieved that any attempt to affect Treaty Revision at the present time was prema ture. Such a deoply important question should not be judged superficially or carried into effect without due consideration, He understood that by the proposed reviaion the present improper and unjust treaty would be improved upon, but he was of opinion that it would be impossible to contract one on an equal footing. Professor Stein had said to him that as the trenty Japan had contracted with foreign Powers was improper, it was reasonable the former should desire to bave it revised as soon as possible, but that, considering the state of the country, it was undesirable that it should be done for some time to come. He (Viscount Kneda) was of the same opinion for three reasons. First, That as a specimen puzzle he sends me the because the spirit of the fourteen millions of the nation was not yet solidified so as to be of one accord in the matter; second, because the country was as yet far from wealthy; and third, because her military power had not yet been parfected. If the mind of the whole nation should be strengthened, solidified and united, the country That a start must be made with ensiet could be trusted to increase its wealth and military power, and if a treaty on an equality should then be desired, nothing would That proprestination seems to be the be easier. Eren should Japan not desire it, foreign nations would gladly come forward of their own accord and negotiate treatics on an equal footing. Without the united support of the entire nation, Treaty Revision could only be carried out on erroneous principles, hence the repeated failures, the revision negotiations being forward at the instance of the authorities and not of the people. However, the negotiation of a treaty being the prerogative of the Emperor, it would be best to await the proper occasion and to accomplish greater unity, consolidate her payal and military strength and bring the country into a sounder position, rather than attempt to rush through a defective Treaty at the present time. - Japan Cuzette.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PROVERBS. (Nottingham Daily Express.)

The philosophy of p overbs is something more than the philosophy of 'old wives', sayings by their fireside. It is true a large number of popular adjorisms suggest the doctrings of Martin Tupper rather than those of Mr. Herbert Stencer, but many of them enclose a k mel of truth felicitously onveyed in a defi ite shape. The bost of them are almost as old as the hills, and enjoy a kindred power of maining the mouldering touch of time. They have survived and liv d in the memory of meu because they wire fragments of human The proverb is a relic of the age that preceded printing, when practical knowledge was handed down from father to son on the stream of oral tradition. It became the property of the household, whence is; perhaps, derived the quaint homespun character which made it, in the opinion of Lord Chesterfield, unsuitable for aristogratic man of fashion,' he observes, hever has recourse to proverbs and vulgar aphotisms.' Yet, in the 'spacious times great Elizabeth, when many wite men Bred and philosophised, this was not so, for Isaac D'Israeli, in his delightful 'Curiositi. s of Literature, informs us that a certain member of Parliament of the famous period delivered a speech composed of proverbs of a must homely character. he subject under discussion was the double payment of book debts, the tradesman who were contemporaries of Shakespeare being too frequently accustomed to manipulate the ageounts of those who took credit.
